COMPTROLLER’S RACE BECOMES SPIRITED BATTLE

Chad Arnold | Albany Bureau

ALBANY - Democratic State Comptroller Thomas DiNapoli is hoping to win a third term on Election Day, but in order to do so, he must beat his Republican opponent, Jonathan Trichter.

Trichter, an investment banker, has said the heavily favored DiNapoli lacks the skillset required to hold office and accused the incumbent of politicizing his office to serve the interests of Albany insiders.

The race is one of several statewide contests on the ballot Nov. 6, including races for governor and attorney general.

DiNapoli was appointed by his friends in Albany and hand-picked by (former Assembly Speaker) Shelly Mayer.

“INCLUSION REVOLUTION”

Golisano, foundation give $5.8M to St. John Fisher for disability nursing

Georgie Silvarole | USA TODAY NETWORK

The gift will be used to create the Golisano Institute for Developmental Disabilities Nursing, a program with curriculum and staff and representatives from both the Golisano Foundation and the Special Olympics. The new Golisano Institute clearly demonstrates Fisher’s commitment to improving health care for people with disabilities,” Costello said. “Nurses serve a critical and growing role in health care delivery, and that is why this initiative will fill the gaps in health care and ensure that inclusive health is not just a dream, but a reality for all people.”

“With the inclusion revolution, residents with developmental disabilities will have the ability to consider a career in health care and the added responsibility of being heard by future policymakers,” said Drew Boshell, senior vice president of sport and health for the Special Olympics.

In this process, Tom has become a champion of inclusion for all persons, and a national leader in the fight to end disability discrimination,” said Drew Boshell, senior vice president of sport and health for the Special Olympics.
